The month of June is Pride Month, and the Jane Addams Peace Association is dedicated to uplifting LGBTQIA+ people, voices, and culture this month and every day after. During her lifetime, Jane Addams fought ceaselessly for the rights of the disenfranchised in Chicago and around the world. She was also a member of the LGBTQIA+ community and used the Hull-House Settlement to bring members of the community to safety and provide resources to them.

The Hull-House Settlement was considered a “Queer Domesticity,” a term created by author and academic, Shannon Jackson. While many people were married with children, people in the Hull-House neighborhood and in the settlement house were creating their own meaning of family. While Jane Addams never married and never had children, she was in a long-term relationship with her life partner, Mary Rozet Smith a volunteer Kindergarten teacher.

Throughout history and still today, LGBTQIA+ voices are censored and concealed. In this June newsletter, we are highlighting books and authors that center and celebrate LGBTQIA+ people and changemakers to better understand their experiences within a heteronormative society, and how we can stand against prejudice to ensure the safety, comfort, and equality of all people.

Alice Austen Lived Here by Alex Gino

Sam and TJ are best friends. They are also both nonbinary, and while Sam's family is accepting, they have to deal with a history teacher at school that has a very limited view of who was responsible for making history. Sam decides to enter a contest for a new statue to be put in Staten Island and uncovers the rich history of an artist named Alice Austen. Austen lived with a female partner for many years, and soon Sam is engrossed in the queer history of their area.

The Civil War of Amos Abernathy by Michael Leali

Amos Abernathy is a historical reenactor. He loves his job, and it only gets better when a cute new volunteer arrives. However, Amos is wondering about the historical LGBTQ+ figures that paved the way for queer kids like him that are missing from historical records. He eventually finds a Civil War soldier named Albert D.J. Cashier, who might have been transgender if he was alive today. Amos wants to share Albert's story, but people in his town sometimes aren't as accepting of queerness.

This is the story of a brave ally of the LGBTQ+ community. Jeanne Manford was the founder of PFLAG (Parents, Families, and Friends of Lesbians and Gays), a group to support family members and friends of LGBTQ+ people. She started this organization because of her son, who is gay, and was violently beaten by New York officials for handing out pamphlets that had pro-gay messages.
The Jane Addams Peace Association stands with everyone who protects and defends the First Amendment to the Constitution and supports the right of libraries to collect -- and individuals to access -- information. Here are some facts about book banning in the context of pride month:

1. During 2010 through 2019, only 9% of books challenged in libraries contained LGBTQ+ characters or themes. In the beginning of 2023, preliminary data showed that 47% of challenged book titles were LGBTQ+ (CNN).

2. Advocates warn against banning books with LGBTQ+ themes as it may reinforce stigma and exclusion (CNN).

3. Many schools have started a practice called "soft censorship" which requires students to get parental permission to read certain books (The 19th).

42 percent of books challenged have LGBTQ characters or themes

986 total challenges were filed against 386 different books, with some books receiving multiple complaints.

Community Highlight

Charlie's Queer Books
Charlie's Queer Books is a queer-owned bookstore located in Seattle, Washington that "is dedicated to creating community connection through queer literature." The owner, Charlie Hunts, was inspired to create this space specifically dedicated to LGBTQIA+ folks because of the widespread book bans that impact queer books across the country. The bookstore hosts book clubs such as "This Book Group is Queer" and the "Literary Fiction Book Club" and holds author events with queer authors. They even donate queer books to schools and nonprofit organizations!

Last month, the Jane Addams Peace Association visited North Charleston, South Carolina, for our "Books in Their Hands" program with Pat Zietlow Miller, author of the 2022 Jane Addams Award Book Award Finalist, Be Strong. This book celebrates finding strength through community and family.

We would like to sincerely thank everyone for their participation and support for this visit. If you are part of a Title 1/low-income school, you are eligible to apply for the “Books in Their Hands” program. Through our "Books in Their Hands program," we bring authors and illustrators to low-income schools nationally to share their Jane Addams award-winning books, and to speak directly with the students and teachers in the community. As a part of our “Books in Their Hands” program, we also donate Jane Addams Children’s Book Award commended titles to each student in your classroom.
